Understanding Anonymous Trading

Many issuers question the practice of "anonymous trading" and would prefer to have full visibility of who is trading their company's listed securities. Issuers often ask why this practice is necessary. To shed some light on the matter, we've asked TMX Group's VP Trading, Gary Knight, for the trader's perspective on anonymous trading.

The anonymous trade option allows a broker to have his/her order and trade appear as "generic broker #1" on the live book and in trading records. According to Gary, the trader may choose this option if they wish to initiate or terminate a position without notifying the market; the broker is trying to prevent "information leakage" of their strategy.

For issuers interested in learning more about anonymous trading activity, TSX and TSXV provide Anonymous Activity Reports that attribute anonymous volume, traded value and number of transactions to specific brokers. The reports, published on the 6th business day of each month, identify the underlying buyers and sellers of your stock.

This information can be accessed through TSX InfoSuite® and subscriptions are available for the following reports:

- The Enhanced Broker Summary provides issuers with a fully attributed recap of the past month's house trading summary sorted by broker; it is an accurate depiction of the broker's overall trading activity.
- The Anonymous Broker Summary provides issuers with an account of all anonymous trades conducted by each broker firm in the past month. This report is different from the Enhanced Broker Summary because it will only display a summary of the trades that used the anonymous trade option.

It's also interesting to note that anonymous trading is a common practice throughout the world. In most countries, broker numbers are not shown in a live book before a trade takes place. Canada is one of the few countries that allows the broker number to be visible in a live book.
